The feedback that I received on my original design docs was largely positive, with the only comment being to align all of the menu bars correctly. Thus, because I did not receive any large edits, and because I loved how my docs looked, they did not really change from the originals. Even though I did not end up changing much, I still found the reviews useful, because it made me more confident in my website, because I had been previously worried that it was too plain, but received reassurance that it was not, which was beneficial. From this point forward, I think I will just stick with my gut, because it seems to have steered me well thus far.
